"Is My Child Dyslexic?"

For parents and teachers wondering if a child is dyslexic, Windy Row recently updated our website (www.windyrow.org) and marketing materials to list some signs of reading delays. A child may have a reading disorder if he or she struggles to:

- Read out loud.
- Count backwards from 100 to 1 (or from 10 to 1 for younger children).
- Match the shapes of letters with their sounds.
- Follow directions for games when playing with friends.

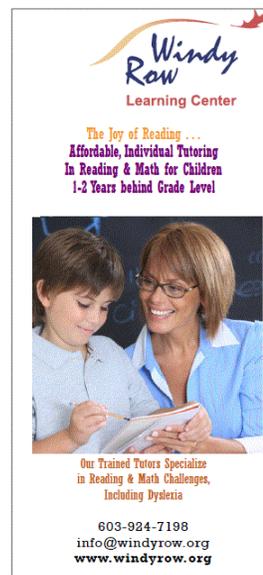

- Find rhymes for words.

At Windy Row we start by determining exactly where a child may be experiencing difficulty: for example, with word identification, word attack, passage comprehension or executive functioning.

Then our tutors create individualized, one-on-one lessons to help each child overcome his or her hurdles to reading.

Please visit our updated website and look for our new rack cards (The Joy of Reading) and new posters (Reading Is What We Do).

The Measure of Success

Windy Row has been gathering statistics about the reading progress that children make as a result of our tutoring program.

While keeping individual information confidential, we've found that the average child enters Windy Row at the end of third grade at age 9 but are a full year behind their peers in their ability to identify words and comprehend passages.

With 2 years of tutoring, these children gain 2 years of word ID and 3 years of passage comprehension skills.

Your donations give children the gift of reading. Please consider donating today.

Johnny's Trucks

Like many 8-year-old boys, Johnny (not his real name) loved trucks. He loved reading about them, too. But unlike most 8-year-olds, Johnny could read only two words: "the" and "a."

When he came to Windy Row for help, he had already spent two years in first grade. He was discouraged and with good reason.

Johnny's Windy Row tutor designed individualized lessons to help him recognize letters and their sounds.

For the reading part of the lesson, tutor and student sat down with a book about trucks, reading together. The tutor recalls, "I would read the book, following along with my finger, but when I came to either 'the' or 'a,' Johnny would read those words. That's how he started reading."

Windy Row's tutors have the patience, the specialized training, and the solid hour of time twice a week to find out exactly where a child is struggling and discover new ways to help.

By May of third grade, Johnny was reading at a second grade level, with the skills to keep on reading and growing.

Two of Johnny's cousins later attended Windy Row and the parents felt incredibly fortunate that they could find tutoring their children needed right here in the Monadnock Region.

As for us, with help from supporters just like you, we keep on trucking!
